For engineering and AEC firms with 5 to 50 people

Your next RFP response, drafted for free while your team keeps working.

Pick any open public RFP or RFQ you plan to chase. I write a full draft of the response in parallel with your team, at no upfront cost. Use mine, yours, or a mix.

How it works

1. You send the RFP and your files. Last three submittals, resumes, project sheets. Due at least five business days out. If two firms ask for the same one, the first written yes gets it.
2. I aim to send a draft two business days after I have those. Every section I can write, in the solicitation's order, a compliance checklist of what is mine and what is yours to add, and a one page fit note.
3. Your team edits and submits. It stays your submission. I never contact the agency about it.

What you get out of it

- Go after more work. With the first draft off your plate, you can chase the ones you pass on today for lack of time.
- Keep your engineers billable. The federal paperwork estimate for filling out an SF 330 is 29 hours per response. Your people work from a draft instead of a blank page. I do not promise a set number of hours saved.

I do not promise a win or a shortlist. No one can.

What it costs

Your first draft. One free draft per firm, whether or not you submit it. I ask for a 20 minute debrief, your team's hours, and permission to quote the result without naming you.	Free
Later drafts, standard SOQ or letter of interest, up to about 20 pages. You owe it if any narrative section you submit is mostly my text. Set the draft aside and you owe nothing.	$1,800
Later drafts, full SF 330 or large RFP. Same deal.	$3,500
Smaller first step: RFP response template built from your last three submittals.	$500
Smaller first step: AI setup for proposals on your firm's own Claude account, with a two hour session. Your Claude plan is paid to Anthropic.	$1,000

Why the fee never depends on winning

Rules on paying an outside party a fee that depends on winning a public contract are strict in many places, and the risk can land on your firm. So my fee never depends on an award, a shortlist or an interview. It depends on whether what you submit is mostly my text. If an agency rejects a submission in writing for missing something the checklist marked as mine, I redo your next draft for free.

Who writes it

Alex Coffman, licensed PE and former principal engineer for the federal government. I draft with Claude, an AI from Anthropic. I read a sheet of every claim, number and named project, traced to your files, before anything reaches you. I do not seal or stamp anything, and your engineers review it all. Your files are used only for your draft and go through Claude, and Anthropic may keep them for a limited time under its terms, so leave out anything that can't leave your firm. I delete my copies when you ask.
